3. City of Richmond

Overview

Richmond is a culturally diverse and geographically unique community located within Metropolitan Vancouver. Downtown Vancouver is 20-25 minutes north of Richmond. Incorporated in 1879, it is a unique island city within the Fraser river delta. The population is 223,000.

Richmond has been experiencing growth and change with remarkable speed, transforming from a rural, local community to an international city with a balance of urban, suburban family and rural areas. Recently, there has been rapid growth in the city's downtown.

The “Canada Line”, a rapid transit system, connects Richmond with downtown Vancouver in 25 minutes. During the peak day and early evening, it operates every 8 minutes. Clearly this is the easiest and most hassle-free way to go downtown.

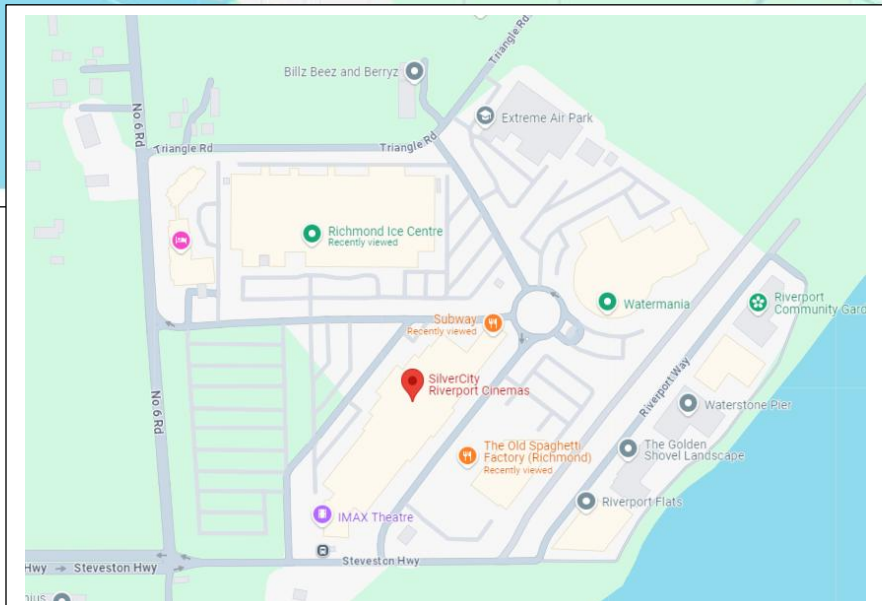

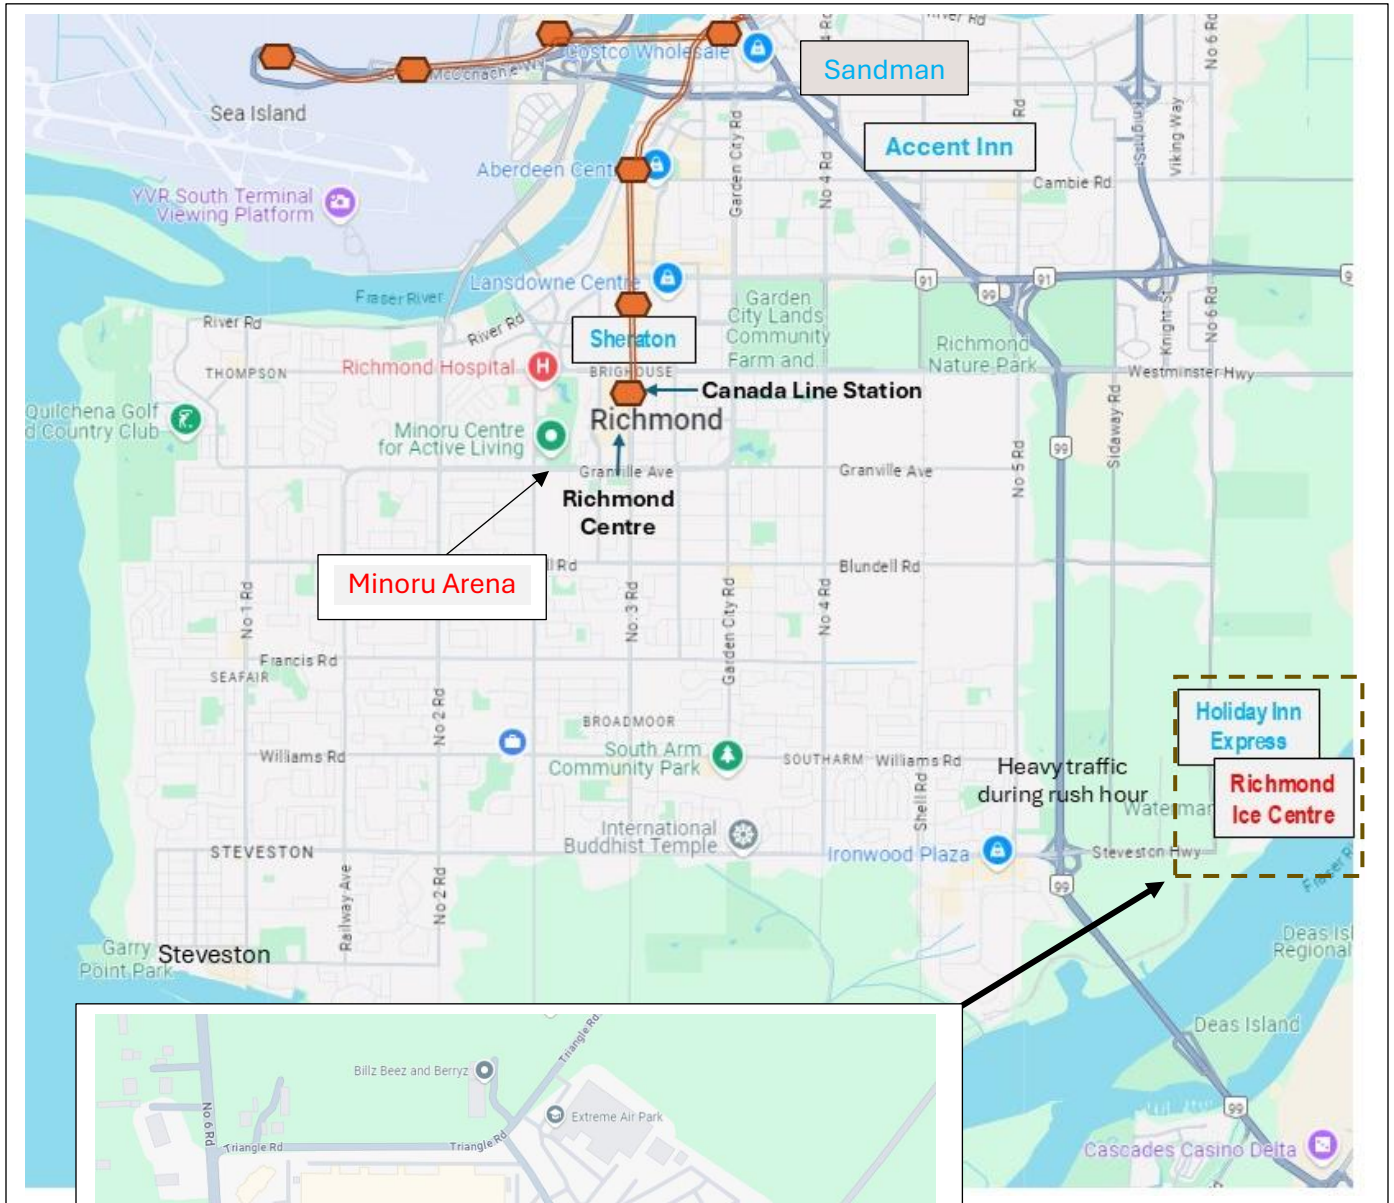

The Vancouver International Airport is located within Richmond and is 13 km or 15 minutes from the Richmond Ice Centre. Getting around Richmond – dating back to its farming heritage the city's road network is oriented “North-South” and “East-West”, with the major North-South roads being named No. 1 Road (furthest to the west) to No.6 Road adjacent to the Richmond Ice Centre. A major freeway (Highway 99) bisects Richmond connecting the U.S. Border and Delta with Vancouver. Steveston Highway, a major east-west road connects the arena with Hwy 99 and the historic village of Steveston to the west.

The village of Steveston dates back to the 1880s as a fishing port and a major salmon canning centre at the mouth of the Fraser River. Japanese Canadians formed a large part of Steveston's original population. Steveston maintains the character of a quaint, historic fishing village, with over 600 fishing boats—Canada's largest fleet. Located 8 km to the west of the rink, Steveston, offers a broad choice of restaurants, and its historic sites are well worth the visit.
