Welcome to Summerland, British Columbia

With beautiful beaches, hikes to breathtaking views and a vibrant artistic community, Summerland BC offers a variety of things to do for people of all ages and interests. Take a wine tour, hike to the summit of our extinct volcano, Giant's Head Mountain, or explore the charming downtown core, bustling with boutiques, cafes and restaurants. Visit the Summerland Museum or Art Gallery, or revisit history on the Kettle Valley Steam Railway.

Summerland is a town where innovation, passion and tradition combine to offer an unforgettable experience. Defined by its entrepreneurial spirit and agricultural roots, Summerland is the true gem of the Okanagan Valley. The passion of our people for Summerland defines how we do business and live our lives. We know that we are lucky to live in the Okanagan Valley and relish the opportunity to share it with others.

The History of Summerland

Located on the shores and benches above Okanagan Lake, the mild climate and fertile soil of Summerland made it an attractive location for wealthy British investment.

The District of Summerland is centered around the downtown core and extends south to Trout Creek and back into four valleys: Garnett, Prairie, Peach, and Happy. The District is situated on the unceded and ancestral territory of the Syilx people of the Okanagan Nation.

The Okanagan people traditionally occupied an area of over 69,000 square kilometers, stretching north to present-day Revelstoke and south into Washington State; however, the boundary of land often fluctuated. Their traditional lifestyle revolved around seasonal resources, such as the fall salmon run at the present-day Okanagan Falls and the bitterroot that was common in present-day Summerland.

The name "Summerland" appeared in 1902 with the opening of a post office on the shores of Lake Okanagan. The following year, the Summerland Development Company was formed to build a townsite on the lakeshore, now known as "Lower Town." The Company was primarily controlled by Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway (CPR), who wanted to develop land in the interior of British Columbia to grow fruit for the growing CPR transportation and hotel chain. Shaughnessy took a personal interest in the area and formed the Summerland Syndicate to purchase land, encourage investment from his business friends, and actively promote the benefits of fruit farming to potential settlers.

The completion of the Kettle Valley Railway in 1916 opened up the area to the coast and the rest of Canada, which was especially important for access to fruit and poultry markets. Even with the railway, orchard owners were forced to negotiate problems of high shipping costs, markets glutted with early-ripening fruit from the United States, and the difficulties of shipping a highly perishable food in the days before refrigerated shipping.

To help aspiring farmers and orchardists, many of whom had little experience with the practicalities of fruit farming, the Dominion Experimental Farm was opened near Summerland in 1914. The main objectives of the research facility were to determine which crops, crop varieties, and breeds of livestock were best suited to the area. However, over the years the farm opened departments for Plant Pathology (1921) to investigate ways to mitigate disease outbreaks and Food Processing (1929) to determine more efficient ways to process fruit (such as dehydration) and to ship with minimal spoilage. For example, the entire process of manufacturing commercial fruit leathers, as well as the dryers used in the process, were developed at the Summerland Research Station.

As fruit trees matured and new markets were sought, packinghouses began to appear on the lakeshore. Although originally independent, high production, low prices, and inefficient transportation gave rise to co-ops. Packinghouses were joined by canneries and other industries related to fruit growing. Together, these were the major employers in the Summerland area. The first winery opened in 1981 at Sumac Ridge, and grape growing joined apples and stone fruits as a major Summerland crop.

In 1996, the Summerland Municipal Council adopted a bylaw that created a Tudor theme in the downtown business area, inspired by the already existing design of the Bank of Montreal. The Summerland District currently has a population of around 12,000 (2016) and is known for its fruit production, wine tours, beaches, and being home to the last remaining stretch of the Kettle Valley Railway.

Summerland Directions and Map

Summerland is located along Highway 97 in the South Okanagan on the shores of Okanagan Lake, conveniently nestled between Penticton and Kelowna.

Travel the spacious and scenic Hwy 5a from Kamloops, or head over the Coquihalla Highway 5 from Vancouver, both of which take you to Merrit and the turnoff for 97C Okanagan Connector. From here, it's an easy drive to where the Connector merges with Hwy 97 just north of Peachland, only 20 minutes away from Summerland.

If you're driving from the North or East, connect to TransCanada Hwy 1 to Sicamous, where it links to Hwy 97a heading south towards the Okanagan. If you're journeying north from the USA, Summerland is just a one-hour drive from the US border at the junction of Highways 97 and 3 near Osoyoos.

Penticton to Summerland – 15 minutes
Kelowna to Summerland – 40 minutes
Osoyoos to Summerland – 1 hour
Vancouver to Summerland – 4 hours
Kamloops to Summerland – 2.5 hours
Calgary to Summerland – 7.5 hours

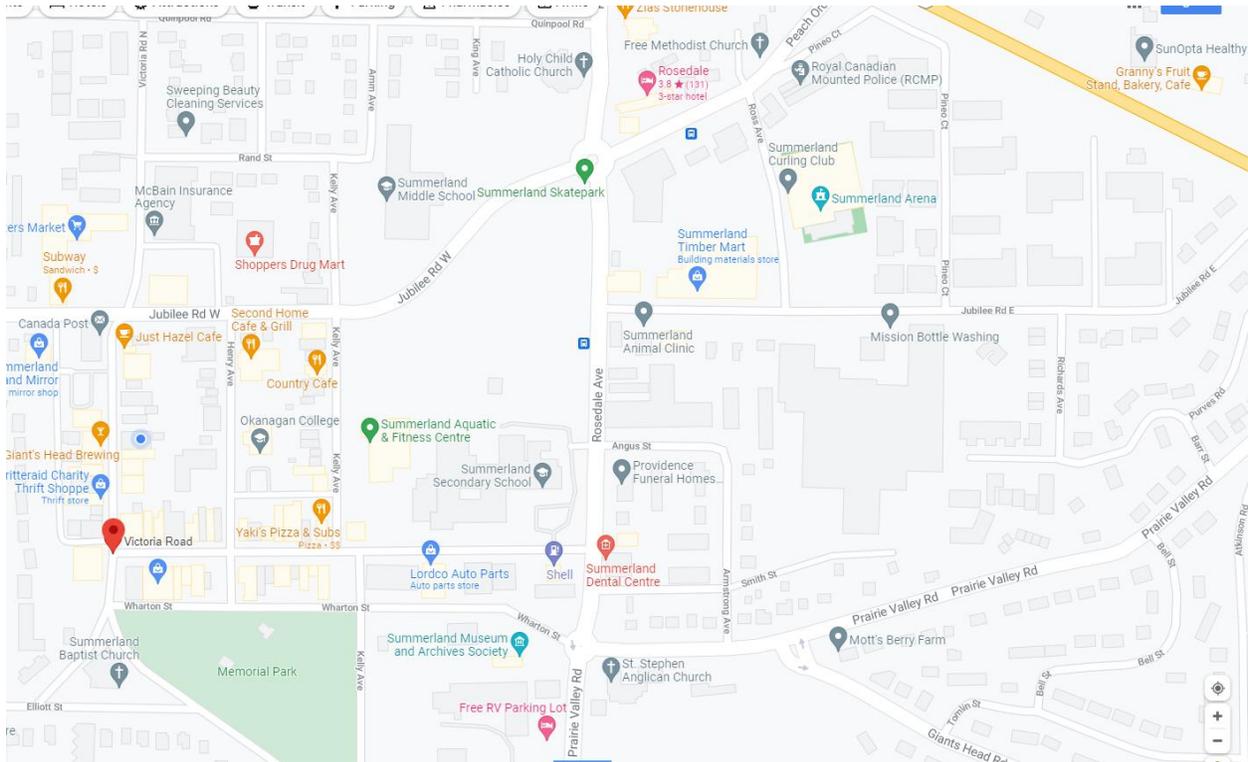

If you prefer to fly, Penticton Airport is just a 15 minute drive away. Air Canada Jazz runs daily flights to Vancouver and WestJet has direct flights to Calgary. If you're coming from further abroad, Summerland is a one-hour drive from the Kelowna International Airport, listed as one of the 10 busiest airports in Canada.
